PATRICK NAUGHTON'S TRIAL.

The Soldiers' Home Homicide Re- hearsal in the Criminal Court.

For the first half hour after the criminal court met yesterday, to continue the trial of Patrick Naughton on the charge of killing Edward Alexander, the time was spent in discussing the rules governing the home, the manner in which applicants were admitted, and the status of Alexander's Naughton as a home. Dr. C. C. Byrne, residing surgeon at the home, testified to being with Alexander when he died and the condition of the body.
He also obtained the knife with which the cutting had been done. Afterwards he visited the guardhouse and saw Naughton, and found him very much excited and talked considerably. He smelt of liquor, and seemed very much under the influence.

Corporal James Egan, in charge of the guardhouse, testified to what took place at the guardhouse door, said that Naughton, after being locked in the cell, as a consequence of being under the influence of liquor, had given him the belly-ache.

Dr. E. W. Schaeffer had examined the knifeblade and pronounced the stain that of human blood.

With the testimony of this witness the government rested its case in chief. The defense called James Egan as their first witness, followed by James Malone, Richard Brown, Penjamin White, and John C. Knott.

The character of the defendant for peace and good order.

Certified copies of the record in the case of Naughton from the War Department, showing his military service, were exhibited.
At this point the court adjourned for today.
